“One year after Sewol: Corruption in South Korea and the role of businesses on the road to transparency”

Dear Members,

In cooperation with Transparency International Korea, we cordially invite you to the seminar “One year after Sewol: Corruption in South Korea and the role of businesses on the road to transparency”.

In April 2014, the sinking of the Sewol ferry led to the death of around 300 people, 200 of them students and teachers from Danwon High School. While looking for answers how such a tragic case could happen, high-profile corruption was identified as one of the major factors.

How does corruption affect businesses in Korea? How can you as an executive discover corruption at your company and what can you do to fight it effectively? And how can business contribute to change corrupt practices towards more transparency?

Within this seminar, representatives from business, politics as well as experts and citizens concerned discuss issues and developments related to corruption in Korea and present strategies and best practices on how to help companies developing effective strategies against corruption.
